Variations to Coaching Contract – Let’s Keep It Simple

If you need to re-schedule a call – please give 48 hours notice. Please send an sms (text message), including the date and time that you would like to re-schedule for. I will do my best to re-schedule with you. Without this prior notice, a missed appointment may be counted as a completed session and may be billed accordingly.

I understand that medical issues, personal tragedy, or unanticipated family responsibility will be exceptions. In that case, please send me an SMS so that I know you will not be attending our scheduled session.

If you are travelling or going on holiday, either schedule an online session – by skype, e-mail or telephone – at the scheduled time, or alert me and request that we re-schedule for when you are back. Please give at least 48 hours notice.

Missing appointments without re-scheduling: If you miss 2 appointments without having re-scheduled, we may have to discuss the coaching contract. Please request adjustments and let’s discuss, rather than having missed appointments.

If you miss 3 appointments without having re-scheduled, this coaching contract may be discontinued, and where this happens, there will be no return of fees.

Banking appointments and extending the contract duration: In the event that re-scheduled appointments cannot be fitted in during the month in which they occur, such sessions may be banked and added to the end of the coaching contract duration.

This enables clarity on the amount and time-scheduling of the invoicing – it will remain the same as contracted - while also providing flexibility in scheduling.

If you need to change the focus of the coaching contract: Contracts and packages are selected in relation to the focus and topic of the coaching. Sometimes you may have a work or life crisis, or face an unanticipated opportunity, which is outside of the focus and topic of our current coaching contract. Where this happens, we will discuss how best to proceed. Some options: continue with the current contract and package; interrupt and continue at a later date; bring the current contract to a close, and use any remaining sessions in the package for a new contract with the new focus.
